

“A Journey of 250 Miles starts with a single step.”

August 18, 2006

One step at a time, one problem at a time said the freedom marchers at the UN headquarters in New York. After delivering a letter to Kofi Annan, Secretary General of the UN, the marchers posed for pictures inside and outside the UN building. During the photo session, the marchers were the center of attention among visitors and diplomats alike. Sensing the attention one of the marchers said it is important to have our presence felt in the corridors of the United Nation.

Several pictures were taken along the streets of New York and at the Statue of Liberty Island. To induce a laugh photographers ask their subjects to say cheese, instead one of the marchers Samuel Ghebregiorghis of Germany said “Say I-ssa- yas”. The subtle humor did the trick except for one person, Tsedal Yohannes.

Tsedal Yohannes, a mother of three came all the way from London to join the freedom march and let the world know enough is enough and free all Eritrean political prisoners of Eritrea.

Tsedal said she will not miss any Eritrean Human Rights march and with the rest of the animated marchers the Journey of 250 miles started with a single step at the UN.
